

Early References to Jesus Outside the New Testament

---

by Ferrell Jenkins

Jewish Sources

Josephus (37/38 A.D. — ca. 95 A.D..)

- ➔ Antiquities XVIII.3.3
- ➔ Antiquities XX.9.1
- ➔ Reference to John the Baptist: Antiquities XVIII.5.2
- ➔ Slavonic addition to the Jewish War II.9.3 (This is very elaborate but highly questionable)

Gentile Sources

Tacitus (ca. A.D. 55-117)

- ➔ Annals XV.44.2

Suetonius (ca. A.D. 75-160)

- ➔ Claudius XXV. Suetonius mentions CHRESTUS, thought to be Christ. He also mentions the Christians in Nero XVI.

Pliny (A.D. 111)

- ➔ Pliny mentioned Christ when he wrote to the Emperor Trajan. Letters X.XCVI-XCVII.

Additional Notes

In addition to the primary sources one may have access to these quotations in the following collections:

- C.K. Barrett, The New Testament Backgrounds [Harper].
- Henry Bettenson (editor), Documents of the Christian Church [Oxford].
- D.J. Theron, Evidence of Tradition [Baker]
- One may also consult the standard Bible Dictionaries and church history works.

Editor's Note: The above information is given for those Bible students who have been confronted with the question of the historical existence and accuracy of the life of Jesus Christ. There is abundant evidence from both Jewish and Gentiles sources from the first century regarding the life and existence of Jesus Christ.

Josephus was a general in the Jewish army who was captured by the Romans during the conflict that ended in the destruction of Jerusalem in 70 A.D. He recorded that destruction, and in his works he writes from the Jewish view of the Bible from Genesis until that time. Tacitus was a senator and historian of the Roman Empire. His two major works — the Annals and the Histories — examine the reigns of the Roman emperors Tiberius, Claudius, Nero, and those who reigned in the year 69 A.D. Suetonius was a Roman historian who belonged to the equestrian order who wrote during the imperial era of the Roman Empire. Pliny the Younger was governor of Pontus/Bithynia from 111-113 A.D. His exchange of letters with the Emperor Trajan mentions Christ and Christians in one exchange. As governor, he participated in the persecution of Christians in the first and second centuries.
