Salt and Pepper Shakers

In the movie “Fireproof,” there’s a scene where Capt. Caleb Holt (Kirk Cameron) and Lt. Michael Simmons (Ken Bevel) are in the firehouse discussing Caleb’s potential divorce. Michael is encouraging Caleb to reconsider what he is about to do. To illustrate marriage, Michael grabs salt and pepper shakers sitting on the table, and super glues them together. After waiting for the glue to set up, he gives them to Caleb. Caleb begins to separate them, but is stopped by Michael, who says, “Don’t do it, Caleb. You pull them apart now you’ll break either one or both of them.”

Marriage is a lot like salt and pepper. They are both totally different—different colors, tastes, smells, strengths. Yet, they are inseparable. When do you see one without the other? Both are important and have their place together.

God designed us—man and woman—for each other. When we choose to walk away from each other, even when we have Biblical grounds for doing so, a part of us dies. We break. We were not made to be separated after joining ourselves to someone. It goes against our very nature as relational beings created by God.

This morning, we’ll talk about marriage and divorce from the biblical viewpoint. But I would also encourage you to consider the topic from a relational viewpoint. We were not made to endure the crushing reality of divorce and separation. “What God has joined together, let not man separate.” (Matthew 19:6)
