“I Told You”

“I told you”—ever say that to someone? Or, ever hear it? Usually, it’s not in a positive sense... I remember hearing that as a kid when in an argument with friends. If something happened that another had predicted earlier, “I told you” was the end of the argument. The end result was proof, regardless of what anyone said or believed earlier.

Jesus never says, “I told you” to His disciples, but He could have. So many times, Jesus had tried to tell His disciples: His kingdom was not of this world, He was going to die, He would be raised to new life. They literally believed none of it. In the end, they fought for His kingdom, they told Him He wouldn’t need to die, and they ignored His statements about resurrection. Because of this, they were absolutely devastated after His death. Given their prior beliefs, it didn’t make sense.

One of the great things about reading Scripture is the ability to see forward and backward in a way the people within the story could not. We get the benefit of 2,000 years of history in the rearview mirror to see how it all played out. I’d say it worked out pretty well, wouldn’t you? Here we are 2,000 years later and Christianity is the largest world religion by a good margin. While its followers certainly aren’t perfect, we have a belief system that attempts to make sense of evil and pain, gives us hope for a better future, and gives us strength for daily living. If he wanted, Jesus could say, “I told you.” 😊

Update

Thank you for remembering the children by giving to us financially. As you may be aware, the cost of daily care and even finding the groceries available on the shelves has been tough.

We are trying to enjoy the last few days of summer before we begin school August 18. Our census has grown this summer; we are serving five additional children. The recreation program has gone on some enjoyable outings. We have had some work crews come to beautify the campus with staining the wood of the pavilion, barn deck, and replacing wood on the gazebo. Once again, I thank you for the gift to help the children we serve. Please continue to pray for them and the staff.
